7. IIA President, Bill Bishop, III, March 28, 2002, letter to NYSE re: Corporate Accountability and Listing Standards with position paper, Institute of Internal Auditors Recommendations For Improving Corporate Governance. Addresses recommendations to be made on April 4, 2002, in a presentation to a special committee of the Board of Directors of the New York Stock Exchange [and later to the U.S Congress], includes the following narrative: "... While many models could serve as the starting point for the development of sound corporate governance principles, the 21st Century Governance Principles for U.S. Public Companies, recently issued by the Corporate Governance Center at Kennesaw State University in Kennesaw, Georgia, appear to the Institute to be particularly appropriate. The Institute believes these 10 principles provide a sound model for effective governance because, like the Corporate Governance Center, the IIA believes that sound governance is dependent on the synergy generated among the four components of the governance system: the board, management, internal auditors, and external auditors. ... Within the broad Corporate Governance Center framework, The Institute believes that the disclosures described in Principles 8 and 10 have particular relevance to internal auditing." (Also included at Financial Executives International website, www.fei.org.)
